By DON NEWTON

After missing Dallas and Houston, I was finally able to scrape up plane fare and make the MULTICON in Oklahoma City. John Clark, a comic fan and artist in his own right, accompanied me on a trip that we'll both always remember.

We stayed at the Skirvin hotel during the con, which is one of the older Oklahoma City landmarks, but there was certainly no lack of modern facilities for the convention activities.

The "heart" of the con was, of course, the dealer's room, where action was always going on. Here I had a chance to meet and talk to many of the fans and dealers. One collector in particular, Wilt Conine, showed me his beautiful collection of Golden Age number ones. He also said that he had completed the entire set of "Captain Marvel" adventures...forty seven more issues and I'll catch up to you, Wilt!

I also had a very nice chat with John Richardson, who is doing some excellent fan art in quite a few of the zines today. John and I have a lot in common, aside from both being art teachers (Myself at MESA in Phoenix, he at the University of Southern Illinois).

I couldn't begin to list all of the fans I had the pleasure of meeting and visiting with, but some names that you all know include Gordon Love, Andrew Warner, Larry Bigman, Gene Arnold, and Russ Cochran. Adjoining the dealer's room was a large theatre for showing movies and for the auction.

While the auction did tend to get a bit out of hand (by that I mean "drawn out"!), there were many fine items available. Frank Frazetta's THUNDA #1 sold for $50.00! About a year ago this same comic was listed in the RB&CC at a price of five to ten dollars! Holy inflation!

Of course the highlight of the con was Buster Crabbe's talk. Though past the age of sixty, Buster still looked like he could swing from a jungle vine with the best of them! His talk covered the span of his career and included many interesting anecdotes about himself and the stars he had worked with.

T.V. reporters were there, naturally, to make sure that Oklahoma City got a look at the famous "Flash" in the flesh!

If you got tired of buying comics and there weren't any movies you cared to see; well, there was always the Radio Room. Here, a vast array of tapes gave you the chance to re-live the "good ol' days" with the Shadow, Whistler, Fibber McGee and Molly, Let's Pretend, and many more.

I was sorry that one of the con's guest-of-honor, Reed Crandall, could not make the trip. Word was he had been ill; if so I'm sure all of fandom wishes him a rapid recovery to good health.

I took five of my paintings and sold them all within an hour after I arrived at the hotel! The subjects were FLASH GORDON, CAPTAIN AMERICA, CAPTAIN MARVEL, THE NEW DAREDEVIL, and a fantasy painting. I have hopes that G.B. Love will use the full color CAPTAIN AMERICA painting as a cover for the RB & CC. Actually, I could have sold as much as I had, based on fan reaction. Next year I'll come loaded!

As for buying, I bought close to $100 worth of comics! I really filled in a lot on my collection; especially Captain Marvel. Also got to look at some rare issues like WHIZ #1, SUPERMAN #1, BATMAN #1, and DAREDEVIL vs. HITLER. There were three Captain Marvel #1's at the CC, but I couldn't afford any of them!

Even though I bought so many comics at the con, I actually read very few of them! Captain Marvel is the only one I can stomach (because of the satire). I just "look" at the rest. But then, a stamp collector doesn't mail letters with all his stamps!

The con was due to end on Sunday, but because of the flight schedule, John and I had to leave Saturday evening. Somehow we had more luggage than when we left...must have been all the comics we bought!
William Black

Bill Black's artwork has appeared in many fanzines in fandom - and many of you are probably wondering a few things about him, his work and his life...so that's what this interview is all about. This was conducted by mail and his answers are dated JUNE 26, 1970 (though it was worked on thruout the month of July), and are dated such. It may have lost some of the "informality" as is often seen in person-to-person interviews in other fanzines, but is still just as interesting. Bill...you've done a fine job!

ALL DYNAMIC: COULD YOU START OUT BY LISTING SOME OF THE USUAL DATA THAT ACCOMPANIES AN INTERVIEW, SUCH AS DATE OF BIRTH DATE, WHERE YOU'VE LIVED, ETC.?
BILL BLACK: Twas in the wee hours of the Autumn morning that William Black first came into this world. Some allege that he was born with a Jack Kirby comic clenched in one fist and a movie camera in the other, though doubtless such tales are exaggerated. Sufficient to say that this entity crossed over in Pennsylvania some 26 years ago, and has spent the last 18 years living in various sections of the state of Florida.

AD: WE'RE ALL, I'M SURE, FAMILIAR WITH YOUR WORK IN THE WARREN MAGAZINES. DID YOUR FIRST PROFESSIONAL WORK APPEAR THERE?
BB: Let me state, first off, that I am in no way connected with Warren Publishing as of this writing. No, Warren was not my first pro illustrating work. During the mid-sixties I was associate editor of a humor magazine that catered to college types. It shall remain nameless as I am somewhat less than satisfied with my earlier attempts at cartoons. During my three year stay at this type of book, I did strips, cartoons, nearly all of the ads, many color covers (front and back), and various photo spreads (fun girl of the month). It was good experience though not really my bag.

I had been sending art into CREEPY for some time, even back when it was really great under the leadership of Archie Goodwin. It wasn't until Bill Parente became editor that I got my break. We corresponded while I was in the Army and Bill kept encouraging me. I sent him a prototype copy of PARAGON ILLUSTRATED and that did the trick. After a series of phone calls between Bill and myself, the first script for EERIE #25 arrived. The rest is history.

AD: COULD YOU RELATE THE CYCLE THAT GOES INTO A WARREN STORY/MAGAZINE?
BB: Parente gave me a month to do a strip which was more than enough time. The first story, "MISTAKE", I pencilled, then sent it back to New York to be lettered. They, in turn returned it to me for the inks. As I recall, it took nearly two weeks to get the lettered strip back. That cut quite a chunk out of the deadline so in future issues I inked the strip and pencilled out the lettering. This saved one extra mailing and caused me to get my work in weeks before the deadline. The scripts are written by various free-lance writers and submitted to Parente (who was, at that time, the editor) to be edited or rearranged to fit editorial policies. Parente usually axed scenes in the scripts that were too gory or too explicit in sex.

AD: ON WHAT BASIS IS AN ARTIST PAID?
BB: Writers and artists are paid per page. Doubtless some artists (Kirby, Steranko, etc) are paid more money than others at other companies. Since there are no big name artists at Warren, I must assume they are all paid the same...which is less than other companies. Neal Adams and Reed Crandall should be paid more, though I don't know that they are. You'll have to ask them.

I have since discovered that Neal Adams was paid a straight $35.00 per page. Harlan Ellison, professional science fiction writer, was paid only $25.00 total for his 13 page ROCK GOD script in CREEPY 32. This was because he owed Warren for a dinner and Warren deducted it from his check! This I heard at the NY con and no doubt more complete relations of this will appear in fandom.
AD: I'VE BEEN IN FANDOM A WHILE NOW AND SUDDENLY IT SEEMS YOUR WORK IS FINDING ITS WAY INTO FANDOM'S TOP 'ZINES. AM I CORRECT IN ASSUMING YOU JUST DISCOVERED FANDOM, OR HAVE YOU BEEN IN HIDDING AND JUST SUDDENLY UNLEASHED YOUR TALENTS?

BB: It's true that I am a newcomer to comics fandom. I caught the RB&CC ads in MARVEL COMICS and finally decided to send for a copy. When I received my first copy (#64) I was rather disappointed in what I found. Soon I sent out Xeroxed flyers representing my art and offering material, to the magazines advertised in that issue. Out of the six sent, only three replied. They were GRAPHIC STORY MAGAZINE (Bill Spicer), THE COMIC CRUSADER (Martin Greim), and FANTASTIC FANZINE (Gary Groth). Marty Greim has been a great help to me in getting PARAGON ILLUSTRATED off the ground.

AD: HOW DO YOU LIKE IT IN FANDOM?

BB: "On the whole, I'd rather be in Philadelphia" Again, I don't know that much about fandom, but I consider publishing PARAGON ILLUSTRATED as one of the most rewarding projects I've ever tackled. By rewards I don't mean money (I'm still $250.00 in the hole) but that I've accepted a challenge, as well as doing something I've always wanted to do, and made it a success. Hopefully, PARAGON will be here to stay. We have additional titles that should see print by the end of the year. As long as fans keep buying them, I'll keep publishing.

Back to fandom... The main trouble with many of the zines that I've seen is that the respective editors are editors in name only. They just seem to be putting pages together without any consideration for layout or subject matter. One book didn't have any editorial comment at all and left it entirely up to the reader to figure out what the miscellaneous art and articles represent. Other books have incredible typographical errors, even to the point of "x-ing" out misspelled words. Such editors obviously have no pride in their publications. Others seem to strive to make their books better after issue. Gary Groth is an example of this commendable trait. It's hard to believe that FF #11 with its color Steranko cover and slick interior is the same magazine only one year after the first issue I recieved, which was pretty bad. There are a lot of good, creative books in this field...and they seem to be improving all the time.

AD: WHICH FANZINES DO YOU LIKE TO CONTRIBUTE TO, AND WHY?

BB: COMIC CRUSADER is tops on my list as far as contributions go. Marty Greim is a good editor. He has a particular article in mind and wants a particular illustration to accompany it. He is an editor. He shows me that he can put together an effective publication by assigning the right artist to the right job. This I respect. Just any old illustration won't do.

If my art appears in a zine, I would like it to be one that has a goood printer. As far as I'm concerned, a drawing is worthless if it is reproduced poorly (such as my STARMASTERS strip in the RB&CC) or is not printed in solid blacks. Again, COMIC CRUSADER, FANTASTIC FANZINE, and PARAGON have strong blacks. Ed Romero has a very imaginative book called REALM that I will be doing some art for in the near future. Ed's a guy that has a good, creative mind and has effective layouts. It will be a pleasure to contribute to such a book.

Bob Cosgrove, like Marty Greim, gave me a specific assignment, that of illustrating and co-writing an article on the original GHOST RIDER for his book, CHAMPION. That I enjoyed doing. Also, doing work for ALL DYNAMIC is a groove because it has a hard working editor who constantly improves his publication and because it gives me a chance to work in color.

AD: DOES YOUR WORK KEEP YOU BUSY, OR BUSIER THAN YOU'D LIKE TO BE?

BB: When it comes to creative work, I'm always busy. PARAGON takes up most of my time but I try to find time to paint and shoot films as well. I enjoy contributing to fan publications but I think it's starting to get out of hand. Right now I must have twenty illustrations to do for fan mags. No doubt I'll have to cut back. In fact, PARAGON #3 is late because I've done so many contributions.

AD: WHAT DO YOU PERSONALLY LIKE TO SEE IN FANZINES? WHICH, TO YOU, ARE THE MOST IMPORTANT?

BB: Strips in fanzines are usually disappointing. This is because they are too short, for the most part, are poorly done, or are poorly written. One book contained no less than four short strips, ranging from one to four pages in length, and all of them continued! Is that any way to run a magazine? Wouldn't it have been better to have printed one well-written, complete 12-page strip?...or two complete 6-page strips? I think so. Marty Greim's continuing DEFENDER strip is a good way to handle continued stories. He devotes six pages to the development of the story thus leaving the reader something to remember until the next installment.

Well written and researched articles on artists and Golden Age comics always capture my attention. But everything is important in the production of a magazine...good layout, good writing, art...everything.

AD: HOW DID PARAGON START OUT?
BB: Oddly enough, I moved from prodrom into fandom. PARAGON is something that I've always wanted to do. It's a work of love that is a true creative challenge. Fortunately, our readers have indicated that they seem to love the same things that I do. Thus, the book is very well received. Of course PARAGON is not just about comic books, nor is it limited to just reporting what other people have done. I wanted PARAGON to be a magazine that created new visual events itself. This would take the form of graphic stories...plus fantasy illustrations, photography, and film making. The first person that I contacted when staffing PARAGON was Stuart Smith. Stu is not only an experienced professional, having worked on many national magazines, but one of the finest artists I know. We had worked together before both on films and as students in art at Florida State. Stuart's intricate fantasy illustrations proved to be a great hit with our readers. He made a natural choice for Associate editor. Marty Greim joined our staff as our Golden Age reporter to cover, in detail, that aspect of fandom. He's a great asset to any publication. Together we've pooled our talents to create something truly different in special interest publications.

AD: DO YOU COLLECT ANY COMIC BOOKS?
BB: I'm a card-carrying MARVEL MARCHER and proud of it! My collection of MARVEL superhero comics is nearly complete from 1962 to present. Of course I collected comics long before the MARVEL age, but never as completely as I did when I came across the talents of Stan Lee & Jack Kirby's creations. They carried their personality into all of their titles... that made the difference. Also in my collection are complete runs of all the DC Golden Age revivals (the current GREEN LANTERN, FLASH, JLA, etc) plus everything done at DC by Gil Kane and Neal Adams. I have a few EC's which I cherish. Hopefully I will add great to my Golden Age collection in coming years. I'm big on the original Captain Marvel!

AD: WHAT'S YOUR OPINION ON COMICS AS A WHOLE AS, SAY, COMPARED TO THE GOLDEN AGE?
BB: Comics are far greater today than in the Golden Age. They are better written, layout is better, illustrated better, reproduction is finer... everything! Still, for nostalgic reasons, I love those old comics. Getting an old comic is like re-capturing a piece of the past. The original CAPTAIN MARVEL was quite well done and is in a class by itself, no matter what the date on the cover.

AD: DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE COMIC COMPANY?
BB: MARVEL is the best company though, after stumbling and stupidly plodding through every decade possible, is finally catching on. DC lacked two good things: good writing and personality. The new BATMAN and GREEN ARROW are long overdue. Neal Adams is the most fantastic artist they have. MARVEL had better art and stories, but now with Kirby switching to DC, the balance of power will probably swing the other way. Kirby is really into some far-out stuff. I'm glad he'll get the chance to do his own books. No doubt King KIRBY will start another incredible phase of comic book innovation as he did in the 40's and 50's.

AD: FAVORITE ARTIST, WRITER, EDITOR...?
BB: Jack Kirby has always been some sort of god to me. I first started to draw from his work in the 1950's. No doubt at all, he is the greatest super hero artist and comic book innovator. Neal Adams is another of my favorites. His work is so expressive you can feel it. He's just got to be the best artist in the field of comics. Jim Steranko is the most dynamic visual illustrator with brilliantly worked out layouts and compositions. He's the only artist in the medium who uses color correctly, to lighten and direct dramatic attention. John Buscema, Gil Kane, and Al Williamson are also all-time favorites.

AD: AS LONG AS WE'RE GETTING OPINIONS, I MAY AS WELL ASK WHAT YOUR STAND IS ON SWIPING IS...THAT ISSUE SEEMS PRETTY CONTROVERSIAL TODAY.
BB: I think the whole business is rather petty. On a professional level, most pro artists, when they do swipe, enhance their compositions with "borrowed" poses or subject matter. In fandom...big deal! Some fan artists try to draw Golden-Age characters exactly as they appeared in the '40s. They draw them straight from a comic book panel. Why shouldn't they? They are writing a "historical" article and the art should supplement the text. The reader who wants to see how Joe Kubert drew HAWKMAN in 1948 now can see fan artist Joe Schorrivez draw him in 1970. The only way I work, I draw the panel myself. If a pose looks awkward and I'm having difficulty with it, I may try to see how some more experienced artist tackled some similar pose.

AD: HOW 'BOUT YOUR STAND ON NUDITY?
BB: It has its place. It's place is not in four color comics for the reason that doubtless it would bring on even more restrictions. In Europe there are color comics in which nudity abounds. I see no reason why the same thing couldn't be applied in the States. Of course such books would have to be higher priced and out of the comic book category. WARREN is planning such a book. Wally Wood will head the project. WARREN said it will have nudity. He has changed his policy on CREEPY, EERIE, and VAMPIRE, making them less sexy. It will be interesting to see what becomes of it.

AD: WOULD YOU EVER LIKE TO WORK IN "COMICS" SOME DAY?
BB: Sure, I'd like to work in the comics. However I'd also like to eat regularly. If I moved to New York I could probably drum up some business. Starting out in this business would be difficult. Not that it's all that important, but I make a lot more money in advertising. I intend to take that money and pour it into PARAGON. Stu and I have great plans for the future. Who knows?

HERE YOU SEE THE COVER DESIGN FOR A FUTURE PARAGON PUBLICATION, DARK CONTINENT. IT IS AN YET UNPUBLISHED COVER FOR THE BOOK THAT IS DUE OUT IN OCTOBER, 1970. COVER ILLUSTRATION FEATURES TARA, JUNGLE SHE CAT. THE TARA STORY, "LAIR OF THE BEAST WOMAN"

A friend of mine who works in an ad agency in New Orleans stopped in to see me recently. He showed him a cover that I had worked up for a fanzine. He said, "Why, an ad agency would get $150.00 for a job like that!" You don't get that kind of money in comics, but you should. Neal Adams, among others, is trying to elevate the position of the comic artist. There's no reason why a comic book artist should be paid less than an advertising artist.

AD: WHAT COMICS CHARACTER WOULD YOU LIKE TO DRAW IF YOU COULD CHOOSE ANY AT ALL?

BB: I don't know! Maybe one of my own creations like THE SHADE!

AD: WHAT IS YOUR OPINION OF THE COMICS CODE? THAT TOPIC CREATES QUITE A STIR.

BB: I think the Code needs to be updated. That's obvious. It should change with the times. I think that there should be a code...but a modified one. Actually the code is only good to keep out the exploiters. The big companies (MARVEL, DC, etc) would continue to put out books in good taste, code or no code.

AD: GETTING BACK TO COLLECTING, DO YOU COLLECT ANY COMIC STRIPS?

BB: Not any more. The local paper, which I refuse to take, doesn't even carry PRINCE VALIANT. Years ago I collected some FLASH GORDON dailies and Sunday strips, ditto THE PHANTOM and ON STAGE. Bob Cosgrove asked me the same thing at the New York con. I told him that I did have the SKY MASTERS strip by Jack Kirby and Wally Wood, and he said, "Well, I guess if you only have one strip in your collection, that's the one to have." I agree.

AD: DO YOU HAVE ANY ORIGINAL ARTWORK OR COLLECT ANY SPECIFICALLY?

BB: Only a few pieces. My collection will grow as more and more artists send me contributions. Syd Shores sent me a great shot of the BLACK RIDER for an article I'm doing on that MARVEL western character. We became friends thru the mail and so it was terrific to get together with Syd at the con. That's what I'd like to collect...unpublished originals of the characters that meant something to me as a kid.

AD: HOW DO YOU GO ABOUT DRAWING AN ILLUSTRATION?

BB: Sometimes I start out by making layouts on 8x11" paper, but usually I just sketch it out on what will become the original drawing. If I'm working on a strip, I have to decide what's the most dynamic panel to build the page around. Usually an action shot will demand a larger panel whereas straight dialog will be laid out smaller. Once I have the composition of the page set in my mind, I work it up in pencil. The figures are most important to me and I work them in first... then go back and sketch in the background. Next the balloons are positioned and the captions and dialog lettered. Inks, of course, come last.

AD: HAVE YOU DONE ANY PAINTING?

BB: Being an art major, and serious about my work, I do a lot of painting. Not illustrative painting but contemporary painting. My painting is a form of self-expression. A lot of them are "hard edge", some fairly photographic, and nearly all of them done in acrylics. I work from photographs, many of which I shoot myself. The cinema is a recurring theme in most of my paintings, the macabre cinema dominating the field. An atmospheric rendition of Vincent Price from Roger Corman's TOMB OF LIGEIA, done in subtle tones of grey, hangs in our living room. A hard edge Barbara Steele hangs over our bed. Various paintings representing some of my own films are located about the house. They are usually quite large, the Price piece being 5' x 4' and the one of Steele being 4' x 3'. My wife Rebekah has been the subject of many others, including one that took "Best in the Show" in photographic overlays. Another of Rebekah was painted as a prop in our film HOUSE AT THE END OF THE WORLD.

I enjoy working in line drawings and I love painting. Hopefully, I'll always have time for both.

AD: ARE YOU PAID FOR ANY FAN WORK OR IS IT ALL CONTRIBUTION?
BB: Gordon Love offered to pay for some of my art. I used my contributions to RE&C to reduce the cost of my PARAGON ads in that mag. Many other fanzine editors offer ad space in exchange for artwork. 7:38, a magazine, advertised it will pay for contributions.

AD: ARE YOU WORKING ON ANY PROJECTS (IN FANDOM OR OUT) THAT YOU'D LIKE TO TELL US ABOUT?
BB: Right now I'm wrapping up a film that I did last year called HOUSE AT THE END OF THE WORLD. It's a horror film shot in Georgia that requires extensive technical effects. That's what I'm working on now...the technical effects at the climax of the film. It involves the apparition of a female spirit that returns from the grave to destroy her husband. Also in the works is a comics oriented film entitled THE ULTIMATE COLLECTOR. I came up with the original idea and approached Jim Steranko with it. He's doing the screenplay now.

AD: WOULD YOU LIKE TO COMMENT ON YOUR ART THAT'S BEING PRINTED THIS ISSUE?
BB: I've tried to make the selection of art for this article a bit different than what one would expect to see. Included are illustrative paintings, "fine arts" paintings, one of my early works (shown at the top of this page), and others. The centerfold features a good many of the characters that I've created throughout the years. I think it's easily one of the best drawings I've done for any fan magazine! I hope it prints well.

THE END
PULL UP A BARSTOOL & LISTEN TO THE OWNER OF DUFFY'S

Even though this is the first Duffy's Tavern to be printed in ALL DYNAMIC, I won't bore you with details of its history, what its purpose is, and so on, so if you would like that information, see the Collector #16 & #18 and WONDERFUL WORLD OF COMICS #4*5 (addresses found at the end of this column).

As in past Duffy's Tavern columns, I have to be sure to plug the CAMPAIGN TO REVISE THE COMICS CODE AUTHORITY, of which I am chairman. This campaign is "housed" in the FANTASTIC FANZINE (addressed elsewhere) and has been formed to revise the Comics Code (not abolish it) to the point where the artists and writers and editors of comic books can have more freedom to express themselves and to let them portray characters and situations in a more realistic fashion (i.e. showing a person bleeding when necessary, letting a writer use drugs as a subject for a story, and so forth). We feel that if the comic book medium is ever to be accepted by any substantial extent by the public, the Code must be revised to better suit the times. Here are a few points I'd like to mention in case you want to know more about and would like to help on, the Campaign:

1. The U.S. has been divided up into five different sections with a co-chairman in charge of each one. The states and people are: DUFFY VOHLAND HAS Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Michigan, Illinois, CANADA, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Alaska, and Hawaii (BOX 70 - CLARKSBURG, IN 47225); TOM BROWN (43 EAST 28TH ST - SPOKANE, WASH. 99203) HAS Washington, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas; MARK PETACH (27345 HOMBRIA DRIVE, PALM SPRINGS, CAL 92262) HAS California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, and Louisiana; DONALD R. RICHARDS (BIG COVE TANNERY, PA 17212) HAS Pennsylvania, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Massachusetts, Delaware, Connecticut, New Jersey, Rhode Island, and New York; and JIM WILSON (BOX 15 - ALPHARETTA, GA 30001) HAS Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina, Kentucky, and Virginia. Anyone living outside the U.S. and Canada can address their queries to me, Duffy Vohland. Everyone reading this, write to your chairman for more information!

2. We need monetary contributions (anywhere from 50¢ on up) to help finance such things as ads in zines that won't plug the campaign, petitions, printing copies of the CCA rules for those who have not read it yet, and so on. If all of you would just send in at least 50¢, we can buy enough ads and hopefully get the support of almost all of fandom.

3. We need person-to-person (via letters, etc) publicity, plugs in zines, and any other form of communicating to help spread the word about the Campaign. If you don't want to take the time to write all this info, just mention the addresses of THE FANTASTIC FANZINE and me.

4. We would like fanzine editors who would want to get involved further to contact the Committee Publicity Manager, JOHN O'DONOVAN, JR (1010 BERRY AVENUE, TAMPA, FLA 33603) for further information.

PLEASE SUPPORT THIS CAMPAIGN TO REVISE THE CCA!

Alan asked me to give a short synopsis of what happened at the 1970 Comic Art Convention in New York so I'll do so now...but because many other zines have in-depth write-ups on it, I won't go into too much detail.

During the introduction speech, Phil Seuling said an estimated 3000+ fans and collectors would attend and, believe me, it looked like that number was surpassed. The con has grown so much that where last year there was only one dealers room, there were two this year. People even spread their goods out in the main hall outside the entrance, in the Penn Top Room when no panels were in session, and all around the elevators. (Talk about being crowded! It was nearly impossible to walk in these areas without stepping on some comics or someone!!) Phil added that because the con gets bigger each year, larger facilities will be needed and probably used in future years.

The whole con was extremely exciting, not only because it was a comic con, but also because it was my first one (and I don't plan to make it my last). The paintings and original art were beautiful; the panel discussions were, for the most part, interesting and informative; the dealers' rooms were awfully tempting (and I literally went crazy buying zines, old comics, original art, posters, etc.); but most of all I enjoyed the meeting of people who belonged to names of fans I've been writing for and to these many years (two fans that I had the pleasure of being with most of the time were Bill Wilson and Gary Groth).

That's all I'll say about the con, since you will probably get tired enough reading about it in other zines without me trying to put it in my two bits.

I thought I might also mention that I (along with Neal Pozner, Bill Wilson, and Mrs. Wilson) took a tour of the DC offices the day before the con. Our guide was Byron Preiss, who is working on the EDUGRAPHICS program at DC, but since Neal is featuring a "TOUR OF THE DC OFFICES" in the WONDERFUL WORLD OF COMIX #4*, I won't go into detail here and steal Neal's thunder. I will say, though, I was completely flabbergasted by the newness and brightness of the place — I always thought a comics company office would be dark, dreary places with unthinkable horrors lurking around every corner.

I'm thoroughly elated by most, if not all of the things going on at DC; what they are producing now and have planned for the near-future is really exciting. One of the best things to happen at NPF in a long time is, of course, the aquiring of the talented Jack Kirby. I haven't seen any of the work he's done at the time of this writing, but quoth Mark Hanerfeld, "The Kirby stuff coming up is fantastic!" His new books, The Forever People, The New Gods, and Mr. Miracle promise to be well worth looking for, and I'm anxious to see how he revives the NEWSBOY LEGION and improves the JIMMY OLSEN book. No offense to Mort Weisinger, but his resigning will help to improve the Superman family of magazines to an unbelievable extent. The depowerization of Superman and the removal of Kryptonite from the strip was too long coming and should improve Supie 100%; I'm really happy about the change in format of WORLD'S FINEST to a BRAVE AND BOLD type mag, and since Superman will no longer be the un-matchable Superhero he once was, the team ups are nearly endless. Unless future issues are changed (I've only seen one under Sekowsky) are changed somewhat, I may not like the "new" ADVEN-

TURE. Although the Supergirl strip was unbearable before now and the idea of a new costume for her is a good idea (but I didn't like the first one they tried), Sekowsky seems to want to turn her into another WONDER WOMAN, almost completely forgetting about her powers and having her rely on more conventional methods of crime-fighting. This is bad because one WW type character (Well, two if you include the new BLACK WIDOW) is really enough. I would also suggest Mike put someone else on the story and art so the book won't become too much like WW in looks. The new strip, THE ROSE AND THE THORN, to be featured in Lois Lane and the possibility of the Newsboy Legion getting a semi-regular strip in Jimmy Olsen both sound promising, also. All in all, I'd say the Superman family of books is changing and definitely for the better. Many other things coming up sound great, too, but I won't go into them now.

On the other hand, MARVEL's latest efforts do not look so promising. All of their new books are just average and I'm sick of all the reprints they are trying to force on us!

I wish someone at DC (preferably Denny O'Neil) would write a two-part story revamping the line-up of the Justice League of America, if for no other reason than a change of pace. If I had control of the book I would remove SNAPPER CARR, AQUAMAN, FLASH, GREEN LANTERN AND GREEN ARROW since they're featured in other mags (with the exception of Snapper who is an out-modeed character and should be dropped completely)...and they should only be used in guest appearances unless their mag(s) is(are) cancelled at which time they would become regulars of the JLA again. These heroes would be replaced by some of those characters who either never had a strip or lost the one they had. I would add ANIMAL MAN, THE VIGILANTE, ELONGATED MAN, METAMORPHO, and either ZATANNA or a new E-1 SANDMAN. The book would still feature BATMAN and SUPERMAN to help sales and it would also give us a chance to once again see those defunct heroes.

Well, I guess I'd better stop before I end up writing more than I'm supposed to. REMEMBER: Support the CCA Revisit Campaign, and if there is anything in this column you'd like to disagree with or comment on, please voice your opinions by writing me (not Alan Light in a letter of comment) at my address given elsewhere. I'll probably either write you a personal letter or include them in a future DUFFY'S TAVERN, since this is the last issue of ALL DYNAMIC.

In closing, here are a few fanzines I highly recommend (though not necessarily in this order):

THE FANTASTIC FANZINE (GARY G. GROTH - 7263 EVANSTON RD. - SPRINGFIELD, VA 22150) =
The current issue is number 12, with an interview with Robert Kline and Dwight Decker. $1.00

THE COLLECTOR (BILL G. WILSON - 1535 ONEIDA DRIVE - CLAIRTON, PA 15025) = The current issue is #20, with a special NEW YORK CON REPORT. Price: 25¢.

THE WONDERFUL WORLD OF COMICS (NEAL S. POZNER - 4028 ANNE DRIVE - SEAFORD, NY 11783) =
Current issue is #4*6, with a photo tour through DC offices as a highlight. Write for price.

COMIC BOOK FAN FAIR (GREG POTTER - 97 MASSASOIT DRIVE - WARWICK, R.I. 02888) =
Current issues are #13 and #14. Write for the price (I think it's 35¢, but...)

PARAGON ILLUSTRATED (BILL BLACK - BOX 1652 - WINTER PARK, FLA 32789) = The current issues are #2 and #3, for $1.00 @, back issue #1 also out for 75¢. [END]
Thank you for the copy of ALL DYNAMIC. I am writing in response to the remarks of Mr. Mark Rogers. They will probably provoke a good deal of comment and I think that they deserve support.

Clearly, Mr. Rogers is quite young and his grasp of the subtleties of art criticism is a bit infirm. For instance, the observation that painters turned away from realism because photography bested them at making visual records is often made but it is very difficult to support such a contention. Indeed, historically, a better case can be made for the opposite view.

Still, I believe that the main thrust of Rogers' argument is impossible to overcome. Most professionally trained artists who have any connection with "fandom" are alienated by the lack of discrimination its members show. The average fan seems to be a mild-mannered fanatic; he is narrow-minded about art and has scarcely any interest in the comic as a unique form. Were it otherwise, the really great cartoonists -- Herriman, McCay, Raymond, for example -- would be given more equitable attention. As it is, the fanzines talk almost exclusively of Raymond and such successors as Prazetta, Williamson, Wood, Steranko, and Kirby.

All the latter are very, very capable, but none is in the same league with, say, the Italian Guido Crespax.

Now, if the fans were all like me, old men of 40, it would be easy to understand their obsession with adventure-story comic books: nostalgia invests all trivials with deep significance. But most of you are under 25. And Rogers is right. You cannot learn to draw by copying comic strips. In fact, you can't copy them properly unless you already know how to draw. It is distressing to see so many young people waste energy in ill-advised pursuits. In life-drawing classes we spend an inordinate amount of time overcoming what fanzines reinforce.

It is easy to foresee that some of you will react to these remarks by scorning my own ability as an artist or will question whether Mark Rogers is as inventive as he demands of others. That is beside the point entirely. I may be a tumblebug, Rogers may be all mouth. The fact remains that fans are not really very interested in the graphic story. Most of them are wedged into the farthest corner of a dead, dead end.

I am not so conceited as to suppose that what I have to say will be antithetical to such ubiquitous wrong-headedness. But, since my involvement with fandom is somewhat more prominent than Rogers' but is similarly detached in point of view, I felt that I should put in my two cents worth.

[I feel that the following letter might be of more interest than several person's feelings on last issue. Much as we would all like to fly to New York City for the grand comic convention, for many of us it just isn't possible. So, while I know other fanzines will give their personal escapades of it, here is Bill Henley with his. It was originally a personal letter to me.]

The first thing I saw was Neal Adams' keynote speech. It wasn't especially exciting: just the usual stuff about how great it was that he was there and we were there, and how the cause of comic art marches on, and so forth. The next event was a slide show and panel on the history of MAD, headed by John Putnam (the magazine's art director) and with five or six other MAD artists and writers. They showed a few slides on the early MAD's, the change from comic book to slick mag, etc., but mostly it was slides of various old MAD articles and gimmicks, and anecdotes about the dubious doings at the MAD staff. One good moment was when Putnam was discussing the Aurora model of Alfred E. Neuman that came out a few years ago, talking about what a bomb it turned out to be, and then asked the audience, "Hey, did anybody in here buy one?" A few people made the mistake of raising their hands, whereupon Putnam yelled into the mike at full volume, "Suckers!" Then somebody in the audience yelled, "I stole one!" Long and sustained applause. Another good bit was the stuff telling about some presents they gave Bill Baines, the publisher, for his birthday. Once, according to them, they gave him a special cash register, with pictures of the MAD staff on it instead of numbers. Push the key with Gaines' picture on it and a sign pops up, "What does he do?" and "What is the hell do you want?" Push Alfred E. Neuman's key and it says, "No sale." And another year, so they say, Sergio Aragonés built and gave to Gaines a nearly life-sized model of King Kong.

Next was the auction, run by Phil Seuling. Seuling used what he considers to be rather unethical tactics: he would hold up a bunch of comics without letting anyone see them and call for bids. Usually this resulted in valuable comics being sold for less than they were worth. The reasons for his doing it escapes me. At one point he was trying to pass off a 1964 Jet Age Yearbook, whatever that may be. Nobody bid, until someone yelled, "You pay me ten cents!" And Seuling yelled "SOLD!" and the guy came up and took the yearbook and I suppose the 10¢, too.
Dynamic!

Apparently, someone in such a position will not have to hunt around and contact all the various companies; he will simply contact the talent pool and they will use their contacts to find the job best suited for that person. The other activity mentioned was a committee with the general purpose of helping provide valuable publicity and public relations for the comic industry in general. This committee would help organize lectures, art exhibits, etc. The idea was emphasized that the Academy would hopefully be the "spokesman" for the whole comic industry.

Lastly came a panel on sword and sorcery, led by Roy Thomas and with Lin Carter, Denny O'Neil, Jeff Jones and others. The talk centered around the new "Conan", and they came to the rather obvious conclusion that if Conan succeeds, it will open a whole new trend toward S&S, but if it fails it may kill the idea of comic S&S for years.

That was the end of the com for me. In fact, I had to leave before the S&S panel was finished.

Really a pleasant surprise to receive ALL DYNAMIC today. I had only one objection to this issue and it wasn't your fault. I'm referring to Dwight Decker's letter. To me, his comments on Martin Greim were in very poor taste. So Greim "lifts"... big deal...we all know it. He admits it: Decker is way off base with negative criticism of someone who is making a positive contribution to fandom.

Otherwise, a very nice issue. I was especially glad to see Alan Hanley's strip. Every good fanzine should have one going all the time.

F.S.: The photo of Ripley on the inside back cover is strange; it looks like a wax dummy!

[Realy glad A.D. 5% met you with a favorable eye. I agree with your view on Martin Greim. And talk about an eagle eye, you're the only one who 'spotted' that Ripley wasn't really Ripley, but as you noticed... a wax dummy. It (the photo) was sent to me by Cliff Royce, a Canadian fan, and was of Ripley in a newly-built museum of wax statues. I didn't mention it then because it would have only taken up space!]

So I finally get to see some of Bill Black's color work, and in A.D. no less! Congratulations to Bill for a fine piece of art. The only complaint I might have had with the cover was Mr. Black's haphazard use of red in the color separations.

[This is a point that I'd like to clear up. First, in looking at Bill's separation overlay sheets, I find that he did a very nice job on them...I'm afraid it was the printer who "messed it up"...not Bill. The red particularly came out of the lines, especially the little block up at the top in which the number of the issue was shown. I've got my paws crossed that my color work this issue turns out better...]

Let me begin by saying I'm long tired of the usual "Great, fabulous, magnificent, amazing," etc. superlatives generally seen in letters; since they do very little for improvement, and that's what the game is all about. After 10 years of zines, there should be vast improvement, methinks, with what all the hundreds of other examples to build upon.

Cover: In the first place, I'm not a fan of black's - the fact that he's selling proves nothing to me, as I've always believed the opinion that there are a number of pros who's work doesn't measure up to some fans; there are "amateurish" professionals and "professional" amateurs. The best that can be said of it is that it's typical of a fanzine, and I except more after all this time.

DYNAMICONMENTS - (incidentally, J. Shull is quite good) To add fuel to Gordon Matthews fire, it was the North, not the South that used exploding bullets in the Civil War, which was the only time they were ever used...and by those who really did not need to. Imagine being hit, wounded - and then to have an explosion occur inside. The atrocities committed in Viet Nam should further put up that America isn't so morally right as we like to think.

Dwight Decker takes Hartin Greim to task for copying; does he know somebody doing comics that doesn't? The highly revered Frazetta and Robert (whom I admire) both got theirs from Hal Foster...Williamson comes from Raymond, and the list goes on. It's okay for Fritz to copy Frazetta, but Greim can't take from them all? I say at least Martin's efforts won't look almost exactly like someone else's, which I feel is better than a half dozen Frazetta's floating around. Illiteracy in CRUSADER? I don't think so...especially compared to so many other zines. Personally, I'd rate CRUSADER at least average, not DYNAMIC, and better certainly than a couple he seems to prefer. But then, it is a personal thing, isn't it?

I'd have to concur with C. Schrek that DYNAMIC lacks depth; it's as visual as CRUSADER (which is, after all, what it's about) but needs more authoritative articles.

Oh, there are paragraphs in the TRACY article I don't follow: "From the pages of American History there are so very many." Eh? (what'd he say?) "Once Dick Tracy's assistant was Chief Patton, another plain-clothes cop...humbler but lovable...and not he is Chief Patton." Whatzziz?

Ah, Ronn, I never professed to be perfect! Your first "blooper" mentioned preceded the title "DICK TRACY: CRIMESTOPPER, and was referring to the fact that there were many crimestoppers. The second one I, too, say "whatzziz"...

I strongly suspect Rogers will come under fire from all sides due to his comments, but I may as well add mine: Comic art needn't be in the form of a series of panels, as Rogers may think. What do you call Frazetta covers but comic art (I'm thinking especially of the EC things, but there are others). An illustration of a super-hero is considerably more than a "meaningless decoration"...the old adage about a picture worth a thousand words holds true every time. Now writer can ever describe anything as vividly as an illustrator can draw it, in ANY amount of words. Now, comic books may be a far cry from what's CONSIDERED art, but they are doubtless an art form, evidenced by the contemporary popularity of lithographs by Dali, Picasso, Warhol, and others. You don't have to agree with this, but it's common knowledge, backed up by art critics and patrons' payments.

Let me use myself as an example to disprove Rogers' suppositions. I was "self-taught" for over ten years, learning comic illustration the proverbial hard way, by trial and error, only to find out that the pros themselves tell a hopeful NOT to use anatomy books, live models, or photo's to LEARN, but comic art itself. So along comes a handful of kids (I'm 30) who copy the pros almost line-for-line, and they sell right away. I don't know that I want to sell if all the pros want is duplications, but that's what it appears to be. Look at all the successful comic artists, and notice who's work their's comes from. Rogers feels somewhat as I do, that art shouldn't be adulterated, but it IS, and there's no getting around it. There exists a formula (For Marvel, it's Jack Kirby, for example), and if you hope to sell, you can't deviate from this formula very much. Rogers - and perhaps myself, are idealists in a realistic world, but the difference is, I realize this, and he apparently doesn't. Comic art isn't much more than a craft, in spite of its potential. Technical skill should take second place to insight and creativity, but it really doesn't. The pro's aren't (yet, anyway) interested in ANY truly creative work - all they require is that you match their formula for technical skill. Anyone who's seen Netzger's "creativity" will realize he'll never sell it commercially.

This could go on and on, but I'd never get anything else done. BUT, one last thing to show this is the Buckler page. It was well done, and it points up the formula. It could have been done by any Marvel artist, right? Yet when he sold to warren, his work looks like Gray Morrow; this is the adaptability to what the pros want - commercial salability. For this reason, Marty Greim is on the right track.

ANATOMY OF A HERO - again, we have a case of idealism vs. realism: realistically, a long underwear hero seems ridiculous but idealistically, very possible. As far back as recorded history goes, man has had his fictitious heroes, built upon the exploits of real heroes; exaggerated, but believable. Now, as Steranko pointed out in COMIC CRUSADER, it doesn't make much sense for Nick Fury to go into all the action he does wearing street clothes, just as a commando will dress in black close-fitting clothes and smear his face black for a night raid, so it is practical for anyone involved in physical combat to be as free of constraining loose clothes as possible. The mask comes in when one wants to protect his family/relatives identity and an emblem work as in the case of Batman (superaction was no joke in the early 40's) or Captain America. As for the nerve to do the things heroes do, if I were as well-built and trained, and possibly super-powers, I wouldn't have the hesitation that Matthews does. Yet MOTIVATION is the probable key item, and I don't think it's all ridiculous for someone to want to do something about crime and injustice in a personal way. You and I haven't the righteous dedication, inspiration, time, effort, energy, guilelessness, or basic ability to do this, but suppose we did? Imagine being financially independent, an ace of physical perfection, angry and frustrated at the frequently senseless laws and injustices in courts - is it so hard to conceive of doing something?

That's not so far between a genuine hero, someone who has done something heroic (cops, firemen, etc.), to somebody who has the inclination (and everything else it takes) to continue doing nothing BUT heroes, to a very natural costume (not costume, really, more like a uniform, like the Challs of the Unknown, Blackhaws, etc.), to a mask, and devices like Batman or James Bond. When first confronted with this idea, it does seem foolish, but upon closer examination, won't such a hero in garish get-up be honored and admired and respected in America?

Seems to me this country is a little short on heroes; we could use a few.

I rejected an article Jerry Bails sent for publication in ALTER EGO #5 which wasn't unlike Matthew's ANATOMY, feeling that psychoanalysis of comic characters was ludicrous, as Gordon himself said. However, I don't believe the idea behind such heroes is unreal or unreal; why shouldn't a band of the Salvation Army would readily justify a hero's motivations, since the guy would theoretically accept no monetary reward (now that ALONE could prompt such an action; a price, but what IS everything about anyway, ego-boboo? Isn't almost everything we do as individuals, as a nation, selfish pleasure? Realistically, this thing, this again, is trying to be idealistic about all, we're taught in the American school; as we learn doesn't cut much ice. Anyone who's seen Roger Brand's THE JUNGLE in LITZWEND can appreciate the fact that DAREDEVIL can have his do-goodings and attention of the opposite sex as well; there's no choice to make, as Gordon cites, except in the idealistic sense. Few realists would consider sacrificing everything else for a single love.

I must hasten to add that I, too, have become disenchant with comic heroes - with all fiction heroes, for that matter, primarily because they aren't presented as being genuinely realistic. I feel this would be an artistic achievement in itself (providing a REAL hero, but perhaps such a thing wouldn't sell or be appreciated, we like our heroes to be idealistic, and this is what's being bought. You can see how this ties in with Mark Rogers suppositions.

GOODGUY is the first I've seen of this pure nostalgia of CAPT. MARVEL and MIDNIGHT; worth the space only due to the theme of color barriers. Apparantly Hanley is still dreaming for the oldies, like Billie White and his style characters; fun for fandom, but hardly approaching professionalism or creativity.

Pro pix a welcome addition; keep this up. A good overall issue, but nothing really noteworthy. You appear to have the ability for something extraordinary; here's hoping you use it.

DAN ADKINS
EAST LIVERPOOL, OHIO

...my favorite drawing in this issue of DYNAMIC was the Newton centerstriped. He's very knowledgeable about what he's doing.

As which is more than I can say for Gordon Matthews understanding of world affairs. There's one hell of a difference between an American fighting for the Stars and Stripes and a German fighting for the Fatherland. The Germans were attacking other nations in an expansion policy. The Americans had no choice to do other than fight or face the fact that Germany would attack them after taking over most of the world. Therefore, the American was fighting to keep his type of life and freedom. The German was fighting to impose his type of life upon others. That's a big difference. The American had a lot more going for him on moral grounds than German. Not that we, the United States, were any shining image, but we certainly were more justified in going to war to save ourselves (and other nations) from having the German policy imposed on us than Germany had the right to kill others to do that imposing.

Yes, we sold supplies to Germany and Japan. We also sold planes and war material to Russia during World War II and we sold our goods to the Philippines. Can the picture be any more clear? Isn't that what you call free trade? We still also help a lot of dictators. But one of the reasons that Japan attacked us was economical. We weren't allowing her to sell enough goods to us! This was mainly to give our people work, because this was in the thirties when we were trying to give our own people work instead of buying goods done by other nation's labor. Hitler tried to trade with us, he did you, but we had told him not to let the people build weapons to keep the economy going. We weren't selling goods to Germany or Japan to help the bad guys. We were doing it to keep people working back here at home. We were helping Japan and Germany to the extent that our sending wheat to Russia helps make their dictatorship worse. I don't think the thing more than keep the people of Russia from starving. Besides, isn't it a bit more complex than good guys helping bad guys?

To say we should have known better than to help Germany or Japan is like giving up hope that a nation could be good. I would rather hold out the hope that China and the USA might get along and if she wanted to trade, we should trade goods. The whole point of our getting with Germany or Japan was that they did turn out to be the bad guys. We traded with a lot of other nations that didn't turn out that way. How were we to be sure which would turn out being our enemy?

I find both Marvel and DC to be liberal in their stories as related to our national policies. There's nothing very conservative about either, unless (God!) Marvel's still hanging onto the idea that there are heros in comic books.

I always thought that 'hack' artwork meant rushed artwork, or drawing below your usual standard. By this thinking, I certainly don't find Martin L. Greim a hack as Dwight Decker states. Martin usually puts a lot of effort into his work. He also may not be very original or creative, but he has been known to do his own stuff and do it well. Like I'm sure Martin has a conception of realistic shading, but rather he has the knowledge to do drawings in that manner is something else. I'm sure Jack Kirby has both the knowledge and conception of realistic shading but he ignores it a lot in favor of style. Perhaps Martin does this also.

And I have a few comments about Mark Rogers' page. "Drawing superheroes all day won't make you a good comic artist. Yeah, but it sure helps, Mark, doesn't it?" I think drawing movies is all right, but you had better do that after you learn how to draw for its not going to help if you still can't draw. Getting an original point of view toward art is fine, but outside of Kirby and Steranko, who is very original in comics, Most of it is based on drawings. And Steranko wasn't all that original following Kirby's style quite a bit and adding to it with weird layouts and patterns.

As far as thinking in new directions toward comics, fine. BUT, FORGET THIS ADULT JAZZ. You can make more intelligent comics, sure, but the kids are still the ones who will be buying them, for the most part. Adults have loads of other reading material. Besides, really adult comics would be sold ten years before most adults would notice that they had changed. By that time, they would have folded, if the kids weren't still buying them. So make them better for the kids, because they are getting more intelligent.

A person who has never sold any artwork could hardly be called a professional. A professional is one who sells artwork on some sort of regular schedule. Not a person who has to earn all his income from selling art, but he must sell it regularly. A person who sells now and then is a semi-pro. Many fans can draw better than established pros. Some, yes, but certainly not many! Jim Pinkoski says "Many fans can draw better than an established pro." God! That's not the first time I've read that. Better than pros? Oh, sure, of course. Berni Wrightson and Jeff Jones as well as a few others, who could draw better than some pros quickly became pros themselves. They have proved to be fine artists. But, a number of others such as the ones drawing for Warren publications are not that good. Some of them were fine when drawing a fanzine cover or something, but when it came to a full comic, bad news. All in all, the proof is in the pudding than fans.

I guess I've commented enough. Must have been stimulating issue to get this long a letter out of me.
This issue is by far the best I’ve yet done. I’ve worked hard to make it my best - the most I am able to do at the moment, because, as some of you already know, this is the final issue of ALL DYNAMIC MAGAZINE. It is such because of various reasons, mainly because of lack of interest and, secondly, money. I’d like to thank all the contributors who gave me so much and projected A.D. so far in such a short time. Bob Kline would have given artwork, but for his mountain of work already, and I’m sure we all understand! John Funtucchio didn’t make it this time around, either, probably because of the same reason as Bob. Thanks all!

But I don’t want to give the wrong impression! This is definitely not the end of my publishing career... not by a long shot! At the time of this writing (which is August 14 to be exact) the final details of the new venture have not been completed, so look for an enclosed detail sheet with all the, you guessed it, details. Now, I’ve promised a few people plugs, and they’ll get them.

Gary Groth (7263 Evanston Rd., Springfield, VA 22150) has printed posters on heavy 11"x14" stock, and fine ones at that. He has SILVER SURFER by Smith, ANIMAN, KNIGHT, and BARBARIAN PRINCESS by Dave Cockroon, and Mr. Fantastic by fan-dom’s Mr. Fantastic, John Funtucchio. 50¢ or all for $2.25! Why not make it an even $0.00 by sending 75¢ more for $1.22, a great zine. Fandom needs more talented and concerned people like Gary! Support him!

The second plug goes to the Rocket’s Blast & Comicollector which is a subject wide open for controversy. I’ll probably unknowingly make a few enemies and bring on some letters from hard-core anti-love fans, but I feel the RBCC is one of the best buys in fandom. G.B. has told me that he’s really trying to improve the RBCC, in many more ways than one, and with Andy Warner it should really begin to move! It’s 75¢ a copy from 9675 SW 212 St., MIAMI, Fla. 33157, and I hope every one of you decides to order at least one copy!

Another important publication to support in the COLLECTOR, from Bill G. Wilson, 1335 Oneida Dr., Clarion, PA 15025. It has a lot of fine layout, material and especially artwork. A real must, and only 25¢ (5¢ Canadian & Mexico, 45¢ overseas).

Also, you might want to look into PARA-GON and affiliated zines, which are all excellent buys.

Some of you may have ripped open the envelope this came in and quickly flipped to the center expecting to find it in full, radiant, four-color offset. Sorry to let you down, but several things just got in the way...several BIG things, two in particular: a) Including the extra costs of screening...which came to around $20.00 extra in itself...color would have set me back a $50.00 loss and b) Bill was at deadline time called off to the Army Reserve training and couldn’t possibly do the separations. I could either do them by postponing the issue a month while I got the correct materials and risk "losing it up" or go ahead and print one of his finest black and white illustrations as just that...black and white. I might do a color blow-up of it someday, but that day isn’t forseeable now. It still is a mighty impressive piece of art!

I might say if you wanted any back issues of ALL DYNAMIC to order them now. If you order RIGHT AWAY you might be lucky and get one of the under-10 copies of #1 and #2 for a "complete" set, but otherwise, don’t bother as they’ll most assuredly be sold out. Issue #3, #4, are each a little more plentiful, with about 150 copies of each left of those (though this is only estimating the stack), and #5 and this issue closer to 200...these last two issues having a print run of around 600.

Also, don’t order any of the Frazetta blow-up sets from me any longer. I am completely sold out (I was lucky enough to save a set for myself, tho!). Many went out to fanclubs and various other persons free, and I about broke even on the project.

As I type these last words (eh?) let me just say it’s been wonderful putting out an articlezine, but the best of my fan years have yet to come, as you’ll see.

Peace.

Alam Light

A Brief Look at Dynamic

If you’re familiar with such fanzines as THE ROCKET’S BLAST-COMICollector, COMIC CRUSADER, THE COLLECTOR, or even saw his work in the last issue of ALL DYNAMIC (#56), then you’re familiar with DON NEWTON. You see a photograph of Don above, alongside some of his excellent non-comic paintings.

Don lives in Phoenix, Arizona, where he teaches junior-high school art. As a child, comics were a "whole world at [his] fingertips." His interests changed in high school, and until he was at the age of 32 (three years ago) he never saw a comic after that. He then got hooked on the "comic fever" so many of us get, and he found himself collecting the "oldies." His favorite comic of the bygone era is CAPTAIN MARVEL. He also holds an interest in the present-day comics, especially the non-comic, non-Gil. He recently attended the MULTICON and bought over $100.00 of comics. He says of them: "I ACTUALLY READ VERY FEW OF THEM. CAPTAIN MARVEL IS ABOUT THE ONLY ONE I CAN STOMACH (BECAUSE OF THE SATIRE). I JUST "LOOK" AT MOST OF THEM. BUT THEN, A STAMP COLLECTOR DOESN’T MAIL LETTERS WITH ALL THEIR STAMPS!" Here is a partial listing of his wants. If any of you have some, at reasonable prices for mint or near mint books, contact DON NEWTON: CAPTAIN MARVEL #1-20 and MANY FROM #75 TO #150, DAREDEVIL (ORIGINAL) BEFORE #80, HIT COMICS BEFORE #20, AND MOST ANY PLANET OR FICTION HOUSE MATERIAL.

Don got into fandom via the RE-CC, and his first published fan work appeared in that magazine. Don is well known for his classic SAVAGE EARTH and his centerpreads. He tells me his best fan work to date is what is or will soon be the cover of the RBCC #75. It is a painting of CONAN and it took the longest of any other fan work he’s done.

He says of his part art (circa 1950-55) "LOOKING BACK ON IT NOW (AND 20 YEARS LATER) IT DOESN’T LOOK TOO BAD." And, of his current fan work, he says "I’VE HAD A HAND TO WORK (AND I’VE HAD MANY) THAT I’VE ENJOYED AS MUCH AS COMIC/FAN WORK."

Besides the SAVAGE EARTH strip, Don collaborated with Ken Torrey on a strip called THE SIGN OF BLACKLOCK, scenes of which were published in a special issue of THE COLLECTOR, along with an interview with Don (issue #17). This was an adventure and mystery type strip, but was never completed or published in its entirety because of the lack of time on Don’s part.

Today, Don is married and has a 20-month old son, and teaching a private art course during the summer months.

In conclusion, let me say that it is an honor to know Don and have had him on the DYNAMIC staff. He is as great,a person as his art is exceptional.
